Foreword

The Brewery History Society (BHS) was founded in 1972 to promote research into all aspects of the brewing industry, to encourage the interchange of information about breweries and brewing, and to collect photographic and other archive information about brewery history. The Society publishes a Newsletter and a quarterly journal Brewery History, which first appeared in 1972. It has also published a national directory and a series of county-wide surveys of historic breweries; the Society's archive is held by Birmingham Central Library. Further details of BHS activities may be found at <<http://www.breweryhistory.com>>.

The ongoing threat to the historic fabric of the English brewing industry was discussed at the conference From Grain to Glass, organised jointly by English Heritage (EH), the BHS and the Association for Industrial Archaeology (AIA), which took place at Swindon on 13 June 2003; the joint BHS and Victorian Society study day From Hop to Hostelry: the brewing and licensed trades 1837-1914 (Young's Ram Brewery, Wandsworth, 25 February 2006); and during the AIA Ironbridge Working Weekend (Coalbrookdale, 29 April 2006). Following this EH agreed to support a project on 'The Brewing Industry', which was carried out between July 2007 and September 2009. Its aims were to provide up to date information on all pre-1940 operating breweries, to compile a comprehensive list of historic brewery buildings (the computerised BHS Breweries Database), to consider the future of the industry's archives, and to undertake a national assessment on the industry, in the form of a Strategy for the Historic Industrial Environment report (SHIER).

Acknowledgements

The project steering committee comprised Jeff Sechiari (BHS Chair), Ray Anderson (BHS President), and BHS committee members Ken Smith and Mike Bone. The project researcher was Lynn Pearson, author and BHS member. Much of the groundwork was carried out by BHS members, who contributed to a survey of England's remaining brewery buildings. They included: John Arguile, David Baker, Paul Bayley, Mike Brown, Des Clarke, Neil Clarke, David Cox, Tony Crosby, George Crutcher, Geoff Dye, Philip Eley, Ray Farleigh, Robert Flood, Simon Gispert, Jenny Greenhalgh, John Hodges, Tim Holt, Peter Holtham, Ian Hornsey, Bob Inman, Malcolm James, John Janaway, Ray Kirby, Chris Marchbanks, Mary Miles, Peter Moynihan, Ken Page, Ian Peaty, Steve Peck, Pat Saunders, Mark Steeds, D. J. Taylor, Alan Walker, Jeffrey Waller, Allan Whitaker and John Williamson. The steering committee and Lynn Pearson are very grateful to all those who took part in the survey.

We are also grateful to others who assisted with the project, including Heloise Brown (Victorian Society), Tony Calladine, Bruce Hedge (AIA), Sue Hudson, Malcolm C. James (who kindly allowed us to see a copy of his thesis on the brewery buildings of Burton upon Trent), Joseph Mirwitch, Ann Morris, Richard Oxborrow, Amber Patrick, Kingsley Rickard, Sheila Stones and Ken Thomas (Courage Archive). We are also grateful for the support of the Association for Industrial Archaeology. In addition, we are particularly grateful to Norman Barber, former BHS Archivist, without whose earlier research our task would have been impossible.

Finally we should like to thank English Heritage for offering us the opportunity to carry out this project. Keith Falconer, EH Head of Industrial Archaeology, provided constant support and enthusiasm for the idea of the brewery industry project. Peter Smith, our EH Project Officer, ensured that we kept on course, while Gareth Watkins, Barney Sloane and Tim Cromack helped considerably in the project's early stages.

Please note that all photographs are by members of the Brewery History Society unless otherwise stated. LBS = Listed Buildings System.

The Brewing Industry: Archive Report

This report attempts to summarise the changes relating to the archives of the brewing industry since the publication of Richmond and Turton's comprehensive The brewing industry: A guide to historical records in 1990. The two most notable events have been the dispersal of records: the Whitbread Archive in 2001 and the Allied Breweries Archive in 2002-3, but there have of course been many other depositions (see Appendix). In the 21st century online searching has made research much simpler, the Access to Archives portal of the National Archives website always being a good starting point (www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/a2a/). In addition, the Business Archives Council published its National Strategy for Business Archives in England and Wales in July 2009.

1 Major repositories of brewing industry archives and books

1.1 London Metropolitan Archives

40 Northampton Road, London EC1R 0HB

020 7332 3820 www.cityoflondon.gov.uk/lma

Records held by London Metropolitan Archives include those of large brewing companies such as Courage & Co; Watney Combe Reid; Truman Hanbury Buxton; Fuller, Smith and Turner; and London-related items from the Allied Breweries and Whitbread groups. An online catalogue is available at the London Metropolitan Archives website.

1.2 Brewery History Society Archive

Archives and Heritage Service, Birmingham Central Library, Chamberlain Square, Birmingham B3 3HQ

0121 303 4511 Information on the Archives and Heritage Service may be obtained from the Birmingham City Council website www.birmingham.gov.uk

The archive of the Brewery History Society, which was originally based on items from the Brewers' Society, includes books, journals, directories, maps, labels, drawings and photographs. The catalogue runs to over 300 pages; a brief version is available to read or download at www.breweryhistory.com.archive.htm

1.3 Modern Records Centre

University Library, University of Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL

02476 524219 www2.warwick.ac.uk/services/library/mrc/

The Modern Records Centre holds a collection of records from various brewers' organisations including the Brewers' Society, Country Brewers' Society, Brewing Patents Limited and the National Trade Defence Association. A subject guide with a brief list of holdings may be downloaded from the website.

1.4 National Brewing Library

Oxford Brookes University Library, Gipsy Lane, Oxford OX3 0BP

01865 483136

www.brookes.ac.uk/library/speccoll/brewing.html

The National Brewing Library comprises over 3,500 volumes; about a quarter of the items are unique to the collection and do not appear in the catalogues of other major collections including the British Library. The National Brewing Library is based on the combined libraries of the Institute of Brewing, the International Brewers' Guild, the technical reference library of the Brewers and Licensed Retailers Association, plus the book collection contained within the Whitbread Archive. It continues to be augmented with newly-published books related to brewing, and by donations of older books from companies and individuals. In 2008 it acquired the archive of the late Michael Jackson (1942-2007), the beer writer. The National Brewing Library catalogue may be downloaded from the website in various formats.

1.5 Scottish Brewing Archive

Archive Services, 13 Thurso Street, University of Glasgow, Glasgow G11 6PE

0141 3305515 www.archives.gla.ac.uk/sba/default.html

As well as its huge collection of records relating to the Scottish brewing industry, the Scottish Brewing Archive has a small number of items relating to English breweries. Its website includes guides to periodical holdings and an alphabetical index of company holdings.

2 Whitbread Archive

The Whitbread Archive was closed in 2001. Some material was kept by Whitbread plc, but the core collection of historic ledgers was deposited at nearly 50 different record offices; many other items were donated to museums. London Metropolitan Archives holds the records of Whitbread's Chiswell Street Brewery and the company's London area subsidiaries. They have been catalogued, and details of the holdings - which extend for well over 100 metres of shelving - are available in the London Metropolitan Archives online catalogue.

3 Allied Breweries Archive

The Allied Breweries Archive was held at Burton upon Trent until 2002-3, when it was dispersed to 70 different record offices. The story of the rescue of the archives - an estimated 7.5 tons of material - is told in Anderson and Brown (2003). Recipients of the largest amount of English material were the London Metropolitan Archives (see section 1.1 above) and the Bass Museum (see section 4 below). Not all have yet been catalogued, and even when catalogued, they may not appear immediately on the Access to Archives website.

4 Bass Archive

The Bass Archive was still at Molson Coors Brewing Company (UK) Ltd and the Coors Visitor Centre (see Richmond and Turton p58) in early 2010. The Allied Breweries, Allsopp's and Ind Coope records formerly held at Allied Breweries in Burton (see Richmond and Turton pp41,43,191) were transferred to the Coors Visitor Centre in 2003. Following the closure of the Visitor Centre in June 2008, it was thought that these archives might be moved to the Staffordshire and Stoke-on-Trent Archive Service, but it appears that they will remain at what is to be the National Brewery Centre, due to open in April 2010.

5 Courage Archive

The Courage Archive was formerly kept on the Courage site in Bristol (previously Bristol Brewery Georges), but brewing ceased there in 1999 and the area is currently being redeveloped. The archive is now based at Avonmouth, where there is no direct public access, although research can be undertaken by the archivist, Dr Ken Thomas (email capelnewydd@tiscali.co.uk). The postal address is: Courage Archive, c/o Harrow Green, Portview Road, Avonmouth, Bristol BS11 9JG. See Richmond and Turton pp116-9 for details of the holdings. In addition, the London Metropolitan Archives has a large holding of Courage & Co material (ACC/2305).

6 How to locate brewing archive material

The first port of call in the hunt for archive material should be the Access to Archives section of the National Archives website (www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/a2a/). The database contains catalogues describing archives held locally in England and Wales, and searching on the word 'brewery' produces 14,017 results. These can be narrowed down by specific local archive, or by archives in a region; for instance, the North East has 191 holdings. Use the advanced search function to search by specific brewery name. In general archive work, broader searches are often useful, for instance adding an asterisk to a word as a 'wildcard' - for instance *brew - where it can stand for any number of letters, in this case giving brewery, breweries, brewer and so forth. Allied topics such as malting may also provide relevant results.

The English Heritage website offers access to a number of searchable photographic and archival sources; from its home page (www.english-heritage.org.uk), select the 'Learning and Resources' section then look for Online Resources. These include ViewFinder, a photographic archive; Pastscape, for records in the national historic environment database; Images of England, with descriptions and photographs of listed buildings up to the year 2000; and the Heritage Gateway, which allows the user to search across national and local records of historic sites and buildings. See section 10 below for website addresses. Another useful source is the British Library's searchable archive of British Newspapers 1800-1900. The website <http://newspapers.bl.uk/blcs/> provides a limited amount of free access, while further access can be paid for by individual subscriber and the whole site is available free of charge in some public and other libraries.

Note that archives of a local brewery may not always be held locally, and even if there are holdings, they may not yet have been catalogued. Contact local repositories directly to enquire about access to specific archives. There may also be material located in repositories abroad. Of course, many business records are still held by operating breweries. Conversely, former breweries may have virtually no archival material at all. In this case the use of other sources such as local newspapers, obituaries, directories and census returns may be necessary. The article by Peter Mathias, Brewing archives: their nature and use (1990), provides an excellent introduction to the scope and potential pitfalls of research into the brewing industry. See also Gutzke (2005) for guidelines on writing historical articles related to the brewing industry.

7 Dealing with archival problems resulting from brewery closures

Some brewery closures take place over a long period, and it should then be possible to plan ahead, in conjunction with the relevant local depository (see section 8), if the company concerned wishes to deposit archival material. If possible, build a relationship with the company over the long term, with the aim of ensuring that as much archival material is safely deposited well before closure. In an emergency, when a plant closure is imminent and archives are endangered, the first move is to attempt to establish relations with the company, in order to assist them in dealing with what they may perceive only as a short-term space problem. Try to obtain access to the archive material, and make an initial survey of what is particularly important; it may be possible to obtain help from a local repository. Even at this late stage it may be worth trying to encourage the company to gift or loan at least some of their material to a depository, rather than simply get rid of it as waste. If the company will allow access and removal of material, but nothing else by way of support for moving the archive, then the Brewery History Society or a local repository may be able to offer assistance. As the rescue of the Allied Breweries Archive (see section 3) showed, it is an extremely time-consuming and costly task to sort, pack and disperse a large amount of material when a deadline is in sight.

8 Guidance on depositions

The Business Archives Council's website www.businessarchivescouncil.org.uk is a useful source of information for potential depositors of records. It advises that many businesses may not realise that their historical records can be a valuable research resource; records can sometimes be seen simply as taking up valuable office or warehouse space. Most archive repositories maintain policies of free public access. Any deposit of records can be made either as a gift or as a long-term loan, although most repositories prefer the records to be gifted, avoiding future ownership and copyright issues. The chances of a repository accepting a collection are greater if it is comprehensive, that is it has not been 'cherry-picked' by the company for items of obvious interest or value. A repository may have to be tempted to accept a collection by the offer of exceptionally interesting or rare items. Most local repositories have websites that carry information for depositors, setting out the kind of records in which they are interested, their geographical area of collection and their terms of agreement for gifting or loans. They may also offer advice as to which items are of historical importance. A searchable list of local repositories - the ARCHON Directory - may be found on the National Archives website at www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/archon/default.htm

9 Brewing artefacts

Although paper archives are well served by the various record offices, the situation is not as good for artefacts; there is no national brewing museum. Little brewing equipment appears to currently be preserved by the national museums, although many items from the Whitbread Archive were donated to museums in 2001. Until its closure in June 2008, the Coors Visitor Centre (previously Bass Museum of Brewing) at Burton upon Trent was in effect England's only national brewing museum. The site is due to reopen in April 2010 as the National Brewery Centre.

Appendix

Major brewing-related accessions to repositories in 1990-1 and 1994-2008

The information in this appendix is largely taken from the Accessions to Repositories section of the National Archives website (www.nationalarchives.gov.uk/accessions). The website offers annual updates of accessions, listed by year and by topic or repository. Users should note that material is recorded in these annual surveys whether or not it has been catalogued; repositories should be contacted directly to check if access to specific records is possible. Data for the years before 1994 is not available online. Entries for the years 1990-1 have been obtained from Accessions to Repositories and Reports added to the National Register of Archives 1991 (HMSO, London, 1992) and a similar volume for 1990, published in 1991.
